

State of South Dakota

NINETIETH SESSION
LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, 2015

436W0292

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 1004

Introduced by: Representatives Hunt, Anderson, Bolin, Brunner, Campbell, Craig, Cronin, Deutsch, DiSanto, Gosch, Greenfield (Lana), Haggar (Don), Haugaard, Hickey, Hunhoff (Jean), Johns, Klumb, Latterell, Mickelson, Munsterman, Novstrup (Al), Qualm, Rounds, Russell, Schoenbeck, Sly, Stalzer, Stevens, Verchio, Westra, Wiik, and Zikmund and Senators Rave, Brown, Greenfield (Brock), Haggar (Jenna), Heineman (Phyllis), Holien, Jensen (Phil), Monroe, Novstrup (David), Olson, Peterson (Jim), Rampelberg, and Van Gerpen

1 A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION, Addressed to the United States Supreme Court setting forth
2 certain facts and expressly enumerating the grievances of the People of the State of South
3 Dakota, through their elected representatives, with that Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, 410
4 U.S. 113 (1973), and its progeny and calling for that Court to now protect the intrinsic, 5 natural, fundamental rights of the children of our State and nation and the intrinsic, natural, 6 fundamental rights of their pregnant mothers in their relationship with their children, and 7 the mothers' health by reconsidering and overturning the court's decision in Roe.
8 WHEREAS, we observe that ours was the first great sovereign nation in all of history 9 founded on the precept of Equal Rights and Equal Respect for all human persons subject to its 10 jurisdiction; that our Declaration of Independence declared that all human beings are endowed 11 by their Creator with intrinsic and inalienable rights by virtue of their existence and humanity; 12 that it was the promise of our young nation, that its newly formed government would protect its

1 people against the deprivation of their natural, intrinsic and inalienable rights, which instilled 2 the admiration of the whole world; and that promise to forever strive to further the realization 3 of those ideals inspired the peoples of each of our Sovereign States, including the People of the 4 State of South Dakota, to accept and adopt the Constitution of the United States as their own; 5 and

6 WHEREAS, in 1868, our young nation ratified the Fourteenth Amendment to the United 7 States Constitution, some twenty-one years before the state of South Dakota joined the Union
8 and adopted that Constitution; that the Fourteenth Amendment was understood and considered 9 by all, both proponents and opponents alike, to be a reaffirmation of the natural and intrinsic
10 rights of mankind; and that the people of the various states, both those already part of the Union 11 before the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868, and those which joined the Union 12 thereafter, relied upon this understanding; and 13 WHEREAS, in the case of Madison v. Marbury, 5 U.S. 137 (1803), and subsequent cases, 14 including Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1 (1958), the United States Supreme Court ruled that the 15 court reserved to itself the exclusive power as final arbiter of the meaning and construction of 16 the United States Constitution; thus, those rulings place a heavy burden on the court to correctly 17 interpret the meaning and scope of the Constitution; that beginning at the time of Marbury, and 18 at all times since, the members of the United States Supreme Court have striven to faithfully 19 discharge their solemn duty to interpret our Constitution carefully and correctly. It has been that 20 Court's constant and courageous efforts to fulfill that mission which has brought esteem and 21 respect to the Court; and

22 WHEREAS, despite the good faith efforts of the members of the Court to interpret our 23 Federal Constitution correctly, the United States Supreme Court has found it necessary to 24 overturn no less than two hundred and thirty-three of that Court's prior decisions because they

1 had been incorrectly decided, thereby underscoring the importance of the United States Supreme 2 Court being open and willing to correct its own errors in its interpretation of our Constitution 3 as all too palpable: only that court can effectively do so; and

4 WHEREAS, while the United States Supreme Court found it necessary to reverse itself over 5 two hundred and thirty times, few of the Court's previous errors so violated the intrinsic rights 6 of the people of the various states that they gave rise to an active national resistance to those 7 decisions; yet a small number of the Court's errors that denigrated the great rights of the people 8 could never gain acceptance and inspired national movements to free the people from the 9 tyranny of certain erroneous decisions of the Court. Two such cases which inspired such 10 national movements which resulted in the holdings of those cases being superceded by 11 subsequent action of the people, or by correction by the Court itself, stand out. In 1856, the 12 United States Supreme Court ruled in the case of Dred Scott v. Sanford, 17 How. 393, 60 U.S.
13 393 (1856), that a class of human beings could be bought and sold as property and be enslaved 14 consistent with the Court's interpretation of our Constitution, the Court stating, in part, that 15 African Americans, "were considered a subordinate and inferior class of beings, who had been 16 subjugated by the dominant race ..." 17 How 393, 404, 60 U.S. at 404-05. That holding of the 17 Court helped tear apart our nation as people rose up to oppose it and it has been a blemish on 18 the record of the court ever since, particularly because it was not the court which corrected its 19 error. In 1896, following, and despite, the passage of both the Thirteenth and Fourteenth 20 Amendments to the Constitution, generally thought to have been in response to the errors of the 21 Court, most notably that of the Dred Scott decision, the Court again erred, forcing a national 22 movement that lasted for three-quarters of a century. In Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U.S. 537
23 (1896), the United States Supreme Court held that it was consistent with the Fourteenth 24 Amendment Equal Protection Clause for a state to force the segregation of a person who has any

1 degree of African American blood from those persons fully of the Caucasian race. It took the 2 Court fifty-eight years – fifty-eight years during which people of the states suffered the 3 deprivation of their God-given liberty and God-given equality – to correct its error in Plessy.
4 The Court did so in multiple decisions in 1954, in Brown, et al. v. Board of Education of 5 Topeka, Kansas, 347 U.S. 483 (1954); (See also, Brown, 349 U.S. 294 (1955)); in 1955, in 6 Mayor and City Council of Baltimore v. Dawson, 350 U.S. 877 (1955); Holmes v. Atlanta, 350 7 U.S. 879 (1955); and in 1956, in Browder v. Gayle, 352 U.S. 903 (1956). Ultimately, after 8 decades of resistance by the Court, the Court acknowledged that its decision in Plessy was 9 incorrectly decided at the time it was issued in 1896. The implication of Brown was that the 10 argument advanced by the segregationists that whole cultures had relied upon the Plessy 11 decision and, therefore, principles of Stare Decisis required honoring the legal precedent of 12 Plessy for the sake of consistency – even if wrongly decided – could never justify honoring a 13 profoundly unjust decision because no person, and no culture has the right to rely upon the 14 ability to commit an inherently unjust and immoral act; and

15 WHEREAS, these cases demonstrate that the fact that the United States Supreme Court has 16 held that certain conduct is constitutional or protected by the Constitution, does not mean, in and 17 of itself, that such a decision is correct or beyond subsequent scrutiny or that the conduct in 18 question is just or moral. The history of the Court in which the Court has admitted to past errors 19 – and especially those cases involving grave injustices – demonstrate that the Court must always 20 be vigilant and introspective in revisiting past decisions when errors are brought to its attention.
21 This is especially true when it becomes evident that a decision fails to be accepted by a large 22 part of our citizenry because it promotes deep injustice, rightly inspiring great criticism over 23 decades. There are no words to describe the importance of the Court correcting its errors in the 24 matters we discuss here; and

1 WHEREAS, there remains today such a tragic case left on the record of the Court, which, 2 together with its progeny, continues to violate the intrinsic rights of two large classes of human 3 beings, and bars the people of the Sovereign States, and their elected representatives, from 4 taking effective, corrective action to protect the intrinsic rights of those human beings. The 5 decisions of the United States Supreme Court in 1973, in the case of Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 6 (1973), and its companion case, Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179 (1973), have never been – nor 7 should be – accepted as valid constitutional jurisprudence by most legal experts. Roe v. Wade 8 and Doe v. Bolton have been the subject of constant criticism from the people of the states, and 9 legal scholars in even measure. They are not – nor should be – accepted by the People of South 10 Dakota and they are not – nor should be – accepted by us, their elected representatives. In short, 11 the errors of the court in Roe v. Wade and its progeny have stood, and still stand, in the way of 12 our ability to discharge our duties to the People of our State; and 13 WHEREAS, Roe and Doe have even been rejected by the Plaintiffs themselves in those 14 cases, Jane Roe (Norma McCorvey) and Mary Doe (Sandra Cano); that in an extraordinary, 15 unprecedented, historic fashion, the Plaintiffs in those landmark cases filed Rule 60 motions 16 asking the United States Supreme Court to overturn their own victories. Both Plaintiffs, acting 17 independently, moved the Court to vacate the judgments they each obtained because the Court's 18 decisions were incorrect and led to the legal protection of such extraordinary harm to the women 19 and children of the nation that they felt compelled to ask the court to correct its errors.

20 McCorvey v. Hill, 385 F.3d 846 (5th Cir. 2004), cert. denied 543 U.S. 1154 (2005); Cano v.
21 Baker, 435 F.3d 1337 (11th Cir. 2006), cert. denied 549 U.S. 972 (2006); and

22 WHEREAS, scholarly legal works which disparage the legal reasoning of the court in Roe
23 v. Wade are too vast in number to enumerate in this resolution, but they operate to hold the Roe 24 decision and its Court in ill repute, resulting in the realization of the Court's greatest fear – that

1 of significant damage to the perception of the Court's legitimacy. See, e.g., Planned Parenthood
2 of S.E. PA v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833, 864-869 (1992). Scholarly works irrefutably establish that 3 Roe v. Wade was fraught with legal and factual errors and wrongly decided. Examples of such 4 works are: Keown, J., Abortion, Doctors and the Law, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 5 England, 1988; Dellapenna, J., Dispelling the Myths of Abortion History, Carolina Academic 6 Press, Durham, 2006; Forsythe, C., Abuse of Discretion, Encounter Books, New York, 2013.
7 The incorrect factual and legal analysis of the court in Roe, combined with the powerful 8 evidence now available of the harm that decision has caused the women and children of our 9 state and nation has left a stain on the record of the court which requires correction and returning 10 the policy issues to the people. If, in fact, the people have a preferred policy, that preference will 11 be known and implemented without it being dictated to them by the Court; and 12 WHEREAS, lack of respect for the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade has been enflamed by 13 a majority of the Court leveling serious criticism against Roe, and numerous reliable accounts 14 reporting that a majority of the Court even voted to overturn Roe in the 1992 case which 15 reaffirmed Roe by a five to four vote, Planned Parenthood of S.E. PA v. Casey, 505 U.S. 833

16 (1992). See, Dellapenna, Dispelling the Myths of Abortion History, (2006) at 850 and footnote
17 124; Lazarus, E., Closed Chambers, Random House, 1998; Associated Press article, Blackmun 18 Papers Reveal Doubts on Abortion Ruling, March 4, 2004. The people of the various states will 19 never have confidence in, or acceptance of, the Roe decisions; and will not have confidence in 20 the Court that reaffirmed a decision which a majority of its members knew and admitted was 21 wrongly decided, until the Court corrects its errors of Roe; and

22 WHEREAS, for the past ten years, our Legislature has held no less than twenty public 23 hearings on various abortion related matters and legislation. In 2005, we created, by statute, The 24 South Dakota Task Force to Study Abortion, which after many months of study and public

1 hearings, submitted to our Legislature a seventy-one page report. Virtually every statute we have 2 passed to protect the interests of pregnant mothers has been attacked in Court by an abortion 3 clinic and its physicians claiming that Roe v. Wade prohibits our rational and carefully thought 4 out legislation. Much of that legislation was designed to protect the pregnant mothers against 5 the negligence and dereliction of the abortion providers themselves. Despite clear conflict of 6 interest, the abortion providers claimed in Court to represent the rights of the pregnant mothers, 7 and based upon Roe and its progeny, the federal district court permitted the abortion providers 8 to stand in the place of the very women whose rights they violated. In December, 2012, 9 litigation over South Dakota's 2005 Informed Consent Law was finally concluded. South Dakota
10 prevailed on all of the issues, but the case took seven and one half years to litigate and South 11 Dakota had to prevail in three different decisions of the United States Court of Appeals, 12 including two separate opinions by two en banc courts. The defense of the litigation over laws 13 designed to protect the women of our state was time consuming and lower court injunctions 14 prevented the laws from becoming effective for a number of years, robbing the children and 15 their mothers of the Law's protection. The fact that abortion providers know that courts 16 following Roe often produce erroneous outcomes to their advantage has operated to encourage 17 ill advised suits. This kind of experience operates to substantially deter most state legislatures 18 from protecting the women and children of their states. The People of South Dakota and its 19 elected officials have stayed true to its mission of protecting its people, but, yet again, find itself 20 embroiled in litigation over its efforts to protect the rights of its pregnant mothers. Another 21 challenge, this time to South Dakota's 2011 Anti-Coercion Statute, is now in the courts; and

22 WHEREAS, we, the duly elected representatives of the People of South Dakota, who serve 23 the people by discharging the highest duty of government to protect the intrinsic natural rights 24 of its people, are charged with the sacred obligation to enumerate those great intrinsic rights and

1 to take all reasonable measures to preserve and protect them. In our continuing effort to succeed 2 in that sacred endeavor we must now observe and proclaim that:

3 The right and duty to preserve life cannot co-exist with a right or duty to destroy it. The right 4 and duty to preserve and protect the cherished relationship between mother and child cannot 5 co-exist with a right and duty to destroy it. It is the law, as it represents the collective interests 6 of the individuals for whom it exists, that must choose which set of interests it must protect, and 7 long ago our law was required to choose life over death; the mother's beautiful interest in her 8 child's life over its destruction; the protection of innocent children over the misguided 9 philosophies and trends in social thought which come and go.

10 If there are any self-evident and universal truths that can act for the human race as a guide 11 or light in which social and human justice can be grounded, they are these: that life has intrinsic 12 value; that each individual human being is unique and irreplaceable; that the cherished role of 13 a mother and her relationship with her child, at every moment of life, has intrinsic worth and 14 beauty; that the intrinsic beauty of motherhood is inseparable from the beauty of womanhood; 15 and that this relationship, its unselfish nature and its role in the survival of the race is the 16 touchstone and core of all civilized society. Its denigration is the denigration of the human race.
17 This relationship, its beauty, its survival, its benefits to the mother and child, its benefits to 18 society, all rest in the self-evident truth that a mother is not the owner of her child's life – she 19 is the trustee of it; and

20 WHEREAS, our sacred mission to preserve and protect some of those cherished intrinsic 21 rights has been diminished and even destroyed by those certain tragic, flawed and destructive 22 Court decisions and the exercise of power by the United States Supreme Court in Roe and Doe, 23 so that we find it our sacred and solemn obligation to point to the errors of that Court as part of 24 our duties to protect the rights of our people:

1 Alpha Center, et al., 530 F.3d 724 (8th Cir. 2008) (en banc); Rounds, 650 F.Supp. 2d 972 2 (D.S.D. 2009), affirmed 653 F.3d 662 (8th Cir. 2011). It is now widely accepted that the 3 physician, who has a pregnant mother as his patient, has two separate patients, the mother and 4 her unborn child, and the physician owes a professional and legal duty to both patients.
5 American College of Obstetrics & Gynecology, Ethics in Obstetrics and Gynecology, 34 (2nd 6 ed. 2004). The physician who proposes to perform an abortion proposes to terminate the life of 7 one of his patients. The killing by a physician of one of his patients – regardless of whose 8 request inspires it – is contrary to the basic purpose and ethics of the medical profession and its 9 promotion and protection denigrates a great and noble profession. In South Dakota, the killing 10 of an unborn child at any age of gestation is a criminal homicide. The creation of an exception 11 to that protection of the child, which exception is forced upon the State by Roe, thus 12 immunizing the physician who kills the child by abortion, further denigrates that profession. In 13 the strictest sense, a typical abortion is not a true medical procedure which is intended to 14 promote the health of a physician's patient. The abortion procedure is so contrary to accepted 15 principles of medicine and the accepted values of the medical profession and the People of our 16 State, that the lone abortion clinic in South Dakota is unable, despite its continued efforts, to 17 convince a single South Dakota doctor to perform abortions at its clinic, requiring the clinic to 18 recruit physicians from other states. Roe v. Wade and its progeny have prevented the people of 19 the states from effectively protecting the lives and rights of these children.

20 B.

21 We find that Roe v. Wade and its progeny promote and protect the deprivation and 22 destruction of numerous intrinsic rights and interests of the pregnant mothers themselves. The 23 People of our State have an interest in protecting each of these rights and interests. We 24 enumerate some of them here because we have found that the court's decision in Roe v. Wade

1 precludes our ability to discharge our duties to effectively protect them:

2 (1) The pregnant mother has a personal intrinsic right to her relationship with her child.
3 Lehr v. Robertson, 463 U.S. 248 (1983); Santosky v. Kramer, 455 U.S. 745 (1982); 4 Quillion v. Walcott, 434 U.S. 246 (1978); Planned Parenthood, et al. v. Rounds, 5 Alpha Center, et al., 653 F.3d 662 (8th Cir. 2011).

6 A mother's unique relationship with her child during pregnancy is the most intimate, 7 the most important, and the one most worthy of protection. Although the mother and 8 child are two separate persons, their relationship is so intimate that the unique bond 9 between them, beginning as it does in utero, creates a human relationship which may 10 be the most rewarding in all of human experience;

11 (2) Although closely related to the pregnant mother's first interest, the pregnant mother 12 also has both a protectable interest in her child's life and an interest in defending and 13 protecting her child's life and rights;

14 (3) The pregnant mother has an interest in her own health. The experiences with abortion 15 since Roe v. Wade have revealed impressive evidence of profound risk of physical 16 and psychological harm to which the mother is subjected when her child's life is 17 terminated by abortion, including the increased risk of suicide ideation and suicide.
18 Planned Parenthood, et al. v. Rounds, Alpha Center, et al., 686 F.3d 889 (8th Cir.
19 2012) (en banc). The devastating harm to the mother and her fundamental interests 20 is too profound and tragic for us to ignore;

21 (4) The pregnant mother has an interest in preserving her personal dignity in her role as 22 mother, a role that does not simply ennoble her, or merely enrich her life, but one 23 which distinguishes her as unique as the mother of the unique person she carries. A 24 legal policy which denigrates her role in carrying her child is not one which protects

1 her actual interests. It destroys them. A policy which chooses to protect the 2 destruction of her relationship with her child instead of a policy which clearly 3 protects it, is a denigration of women, because a policy which is based upon the 4 assumption that it is a distressing experience to be a mother is a statement that it is 5 bad to be a woman;

6 (5) A woman has an interest in not being exploited. Abortion embodies societal 7 pressures which destroy her interests as a mother to satisfy the interests of third 8 parties, including, in various cases, the father of the child, her employer, her parents, 9 abortion clinics, segments of society and others, who may have personal interests in 10 conflict with those of mother and child. Abortion exploits women by treating the 11 mother as if she is not a whole woman. It assumes she can be sexually exploited and, 12 when that exploitation results in pregnancy, act as though she is not, in fact, a mother.
13 Abortion demands that she detach herself from her experience and her bond, love, 14 and sense of duty to herself and her child. It expects a mother to prevent the bonding 15 process despite the fact that this natural process is both psychological and 16 physiological. The assumption that the culture and society "relies" upon abortion, is 17 an assumption that the society at large is free to use the mother as a sexual object 18 without regard for the harm abortion can cause her. It allocates all of the risk, guilt, 19 psychological and physical pain to her and further isolates her in her circumstance of 20 an unplanned pregnancy by placing the responsibility of killing her child entirely 21 upon her;

22 (6) A woman has an interest in having the law extend to her dignity and respect by 23 recognizing that she is capable of living with dignity in the family, and happily 24 competing in the commercial and professional life of this nation, rather than being

1 denigrated by specially and artificially crafted "principles of law" which ingrain the 2 belief that she is inherently inferior because she cannot be happy in life without an 3 exclusive "right" to terminate the life of her own child.

4 The mother contemplating an abortion is not exercising a right, she is contemplating waiving 5 or surrendering the most important intrinsic natural right she possesses in all of life other than 6 her own right to life itself. That fact, although simple to state, has profound implications.
7 Protection of the integrity of the informed and voluntary nature of that waiver was ignored by 8 Roe, and abortion as a method of terminating the mother's relationship with her child has been 9 proven to be unworkable in practice.

10 The reason the act of a doctor which terminates the life of a human being – whether or not 11 it is cast in terms of rights belonging to the mother of the child – is not protected by Due Process 12 is not simply because history and tradition has not demonstrated that it is a value which 13 underlies society. Surely it is not. But the real reason – one which resonates with the compassion 14 for the welfare of the women – is that the mother possesses liberties fundamental in nature, 15 which the doctor destroys. It is simply impossible for the Constitution to protect the mother's 16 fundamental right to her relationship with her child, and at the same time protect the act of the 17 doctor who terminates that relationship by terminating the life of the mother's child.

18 These interests of the pregnant mothers and their children were largely or completely 19 ignored by the Roe Court, and the Court ignored them in Planned Parenthood of S.E. PA v.
20 Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992). In fact, Casey reaffirmed Roe stating that it need not decide this 21 issue (whether terminating the life of the unborn child is protected by the Constitution as a 22 liberty) as if it were before the court for the first time. The Court's joint opinion emphasized the 23 doctrine of stare decisis which requires consistency in the Court's decisions even if a prior 24 decision was wrongly decided unless certain conditions are met. In upholding Roe, what the 1 Casey Court erroneously observed about Roe's error was that:

2 "Nor will courts building upon Roe be likely to hand down erroneous decisions as a 3 consequence. Even on the assumption that the central holding of Roe was in error, 4 that error would go only to the strength of the state interest in fetal protection, not to 5 the recognition afforded by the Constitution to the women's liberty." Planned 6 Parenthood of S.E. PA v. Casey, 505 U.S. at 858 (1992) (emphasis added).

7 While we are disturbed by the dismissal of the profound importance of the protection of the 8 lives of the children, we are even more greatly disturbed by the Court's assertion that the rights 9 and interests of the mothers themselves are not negatively affected at all by Roe. Time, and the 10 evidence it has provided, has proven this statement of Casey, like each of the underlying factual
11 assumptions of Roe, to be in error. We now find it imperative that we discharge our obligations 12 to the People of our State, by identifying and listing our numerous grievances with the decision 13 of the United States Supreme Court in Roe v. Wade and its progeny.

14 Section 2. Our grievances are not with the Court itself, nor its members, but rather with the 15 tragic errors made by the Court some forty-two years ago in the Court's decision rendered in Roe 16 v. Wade, and the Court's subsequent errors in Planned Parenthood of S.E. PA v. Casey, which 17 reaffirmed those errors. We issue this solemn resolution in confidence with the knowledge that 18 the Court's history of being open to correct its errors will serve the Court and our People well 19 once more; and that this resolution and the call of the People of South Dakota and their elected 20 representatives will be well received as one issued in good faith, made with respect for the 21 Court, and made with humility. It is one made in the highest tradition of our nation's 22 commitment to full-throated expression and discourse on matters of grave public concern.

23 With that confidence, we list our specific grievances with those decisions:

24 (1) It is manifestly obvious that the Court should not have attempted to address the 1 constitutional issues it addressed in the cases of Roe and Doe, first and foremost, 2 because they had no factual record, no discovery, and the Court had no evidence of 3 any kind in the record. The record in Roe consisted of an affidavit from Jane Roe, 4 Norma McCorvy, which she testified in her Rule 60 Motion papers that she never 5 read. The record in Doe consisted of an affidavit from Mary Doe, Sandra Cano, 6 which she testified in her Rule 60 Motion papers she never signed. Sandra Cano 7 testified that her signature was forged, and that she neither sought nor wanted an 8 abortion;

9 (2) Because the Courts were so irrationally anxious to rule on the merits of the academic 10 questions being urged on the Courts in Roe and Doe, the States of Texas and Georgia 11 were denied discovery, including the opportunity to depose those two Plaintiffs, 12 which would have revealed the facts they both publically disclosed years later. We 13 take issue with the Court deciding so important a constitutional question with a 14 complete lack of knowledge of the facts, discovery, and record;

15 (3) The Court took it upon itself to assume facts, given the lack of a factual record. Every 16 essential "fact" recited by the majority in Roe and Doe were uneducated assumptions 17 all of which have been proven to be completely or largely false. We include the 18 following among them:

19 (a) The Court made the false assertion that it could not be determined when the 20 life of a human being began. It is indisputable that the unborn child is a whole, 21 separate, unique, living human being throughout gestation from fertilization 22 to full gestation. Planned Parenthood, et al. v. Rounds, Alpha Center, et al., 23 530 F.3d 724 (8th Cir. 2008) (en banc); Rounds, 650 F.Supp. 2d 972 (D.S.D.
24 2009), affirmed 653 F.3d 662 (8th Cir. 2011). While we conclude this fact was

1 known in 1973, advances in science, particularly molecular biology and 2 genetics, over the past forty years removes any doubt about that fact. To the 3 extent that the Roe court was primarily concerned with the legal status of those 4 human beings, it was a grave failure of the Court – one which cannot be 5 overlooked – not to begin such a legal inquiry by observing the very existence 6 of the human being whose life would be terminated. The Court's failure to 7 observe that a whole, separate, unique, living human being is killed by an 8 abortion affects not only the issue of the child's rights, but that failure also 9 doomed any reasonable analysis pertaining to the mother's rights and interests;

10 (b) We take issue with the fact that this failure of the Court – to acknowledge that 11 the unborn child is a whole, separate, unique, living human being – has 12 resulted in the Courts, and others, using that failure to deny the humanity of 13 those unborn children. To the extent that the Court thought that the state of 14 science in 1973 did not sufficiently illuminate the factual inquiry for the Court 15 at that time, no such impediment exists today. The fact that an abortion 16 terminates the life of a whole, separate, unique, living human being is now 17 resolved. Planned Parenthood et al. v. Rounds, Alpha Center et al., 530 F.3d 18 724 (8th Cir. 2008) (en banc); Rounds, 650 F.Supp. 2d 972 (D.S.D. 2009), 19 affirmed 653 F.3d 662 (8th Cir. 2011);

20 (c) The Court assumed that the decision the pregnant mother faced was primarily 21 a medical question the woman should reach with an abortion doctor; when, in 22 fact, it was primarily a social question about her personal circumstances. We 23 have long concluded that the decision a pregnant mother faces of whether or 24 not to keep her relationship with her child is one of the most important she

1 will make in all of life, and that the abortion doctor and the personnel at an 2 abortion clinic are not the proper persons to assist or counsel in that decision, 3 because, among other reasons, their pecuniary interests and personal 4 convictions often conflict with the interests of the pregnant mother. The 5 philosophy and interests of abortion clinics, doctors, and personnel are hostile 6 to the mother's interest in exercising her right to keep her relationship with her 7 child, rendering them ill-suited to properly counsel the pregnant mother about 8 her personal question of whether she should and can maintain her relationship 9 with her child;

10 (d) The Court assumed that there would be a normal and healthy physician-patient 11 relationship. Experience has proven that usually no such relationship exists 12 and that abortions, as performed in our state, are among the worst form of 13 itinerant surgery, the kind of surgery which mainstream medicine considers 14 unethical;

15 (e) The Court assumed that a woman's consent for an abortion would be informed 16 and voluntary. The best evidence available indicates that most abortions are 17 uninformed or not truly voluntary, or both. Evidence now demonstrates that 18 abortion facilities do not make adequate disclosures of the facts and risks of 19 the procedure. Evidence now proves that pregnant mothers are subjected to 20 pressure and coercion to have abortions they do not want. Evidence now 21 shows that there is violence against pregnant mothers to compel them to have 22 abortions of their children they prefer to keep. It is now known that the 23 number one cause of deaths among pregnant mothers is murder, and that most 24 of those murders are performed by the mother's male partner. There is

1 impressive evidence that women are the victims of violence and even murder 2 when pregnant mothers refuse to abort the children they carry;

3 (f) The Court assumed that motherhood was somehow inherently distressing. The 4 truth is that motherhood is inherently beneficial to the mother, and 5 motherhood lost is inherently painful and distressing, and leaves an emptiness 6 for the mother;

7 (g) The Court assumed that what the mother carried was mere potential, when, in 8 fact, she had an existing relationship with her child, a human being already in 9 existence;

10 (h) The Court assumed that abortion was a very safe procedure. This assumption 11 has proven to be false. It possesses many dangers to the health and life of the 12 mother, including increased risk of suicide ideation and suicide;

13 (4) One of Roe's greatest errors with which we take issue is Roes failure to recognize and 14 account for the pregnant mother's fundamental right and liberty interests in her 15 maintaining her relationship with her child. The Court ignored this right and ignored 16 the enormous loss to the mother which abortion inflicts. The Court's decision treats 17 abortion only as a benefit to the woman, and assumes she loses nothing of value to 18 her. The harmful consequences of this error of the Court are too profound and vast 19 to overestimate;

20 (5) One tragic consequence of Roe was that in one impulsive swoop, the Court wiped 21 away all of the states' carefully created protections for pregnant mothers designed to 22 insure that a termination of her relationship with her child (in adoption procedures) 23 would be free from coercion and undue or unwelcome influence of others and so that 24 no termination could take place unless it was truly informed and voluntary, was

1 treated as a last option, and was subject to court review;

2 (6) One of Roe's central errors was its failure to define and characterize the conduct 3 which was asserted to be protected as a liberty under the Fourteenth Amendment.
4 This failure was further compounded by the use of sanitizing language which created 5 the illusion that the conduct was relatively benign. The starting point for any Due 6 Process analysis is for the Court to describe and define the conduct in question.
7 Washington v. Glucksberg, 521 U.S. 702, 721-23 (1997). The Roe Court violated one 8 of its own basic principles in failing to sufficiently describe the conduct. The conduct 9 was that of a physician terminating the life of one of his patients. Since the conduct 10 has been couched in the abortion providers' terms of the right of a woman, the 11 Glucksberg Court would have described it as the right of a mother to terminate the 12 life of her child, which contains within it, the right to have the assistance of a 13 physician in doing so. See, Glucksberg, 521 U.S. at 723. This failure of the Court on 14 this initial inquiry played a significant role in the court reaching an erroneous result;

15 (7) We agree with the numerous legal authorities and scholars who criticize Roe as 16 having made from whole cloth a so-called right or liberty that cannot logically or 17 reasonably be deduced from the Fourteenth Amendment Due Process Clause. The 18 central problem with Roe finding such a made-up right is that it frustrates and 19 destroys one of the oldest rights and liberty interests of the mother ever recognized 20 by the Court. Thus, the abortion doctor's conduct in killing one of his patients is not 21 a liberty protected by the Fourteenth Amendment for the reason that the mother has 22 no recognized rights; rather it is not protected precisely because she does have 23 fundamental rights, rights which are destroyed by the physician's act;

24 (8) We take issue with Roe's failure to account for the child's interests as a human being

1 whose life is terminated;

2 (9) We find that the Court made certain false assumptions in Planned Parenthood v.
3 Casey, 505 U.S. 833 (1992), in its stare decisis analysis intended to justify the 4 Court's reaffirmation of Roe. The Court acknowledged that satisfaction of any one 5 of four different principles would satisfy the requirements of stare decisis to justify 6 overturning Roe. 505 U.S. at 854-69.

7 Experience and the facts now available demonstrate that not one, but all four methods of 8 satisfying stare decisis can now be met:

9 (1) Abortion is a completely unworkable method to terminate the mother's 10 constitutionally protected interest in her relationship with her child, and Roe has 11 badly compromised the mother's rights in a number of circumstances. Because of 12 Roe, the mother's long recognized fundamental rights and interests are frustrated and 13 denied;

14 (2) It cannot be said that the women of the nation rely upon a right to terminate the lives 15 of their children, and the inherently unjust nature of an act that would be considered 16 criminal if it were not for Roe v. Wade, cannot be said to be the kind of act that 17 anyone has a right to rely upon. Experience has demonstrated that if anyone relies 18 upon the legal availability of abortion, it is the man who exploits a woman and later 19 demands that she have an abortion that he thinks it is her duty to him to obtain;

20 (3) The evolution of how the courts now understand the legitimacy of the state's 21 protection of the mother's right to her relationship with her child, and protection 22 against violence, coerced and uninformed consents all demonstrate that Roe was 23 based on false assumptions and failure to recognize and consider the mother's real 24 rights, all of which flaws have weakened Roe, if it ever had any real strength of its

1 own;

2 (4) Finally, and quite clearly, Roe's assumptions of fact have all proven to be either 3 totally or largely false and inaccurate.

4 Section 3. The errors of Roe are too clear, the harm that decision has caused the women in 5 our State and throughout the nation too tragic, the deaths of our children too numerous, and the 6 inherently unjust nature of the conduct too plain for our Supreme Court to fail to act to overturn 7 that decision.

8 We, the elected representatives of the People of South Dakota, call upon the Supreme Court 9 of the United States to scrutinize abortion cases now in the courts and those which will shortly 10 be so, to select the case that most properly presents the important issues, in order to reassess Roe 11 and Casey, and overturn them. We suggest that it is now time for the Court to restore to the 12 People of the States and their elected representatives the ability to freely and openly debate what 13 policies they should adopt to protect the women and children of their states free from unjustified 14 interference from the Court's errors of Roe.
