The Great State of South Dakota

History:

From 1700 to 1750, the tribes of the Sioux Nation clashed with the Arikara, Mandan and Omaha for control of eastern Dakota. By the late 1700s, the Sioux Nation dominated the northern Plains.

In 1743, the Verendrye brothers, the first Europeans to see the Black Hills, buried an inscribed lead plate near present-day Fort Pierre, claiming the land for France.

The territory that would become South Dakota was purchased from France and added to the United States in 1803 as part of the Louisiana Purchase. Nine states were eventually organized out of the Louisiana Territory.

The first permanent American settlement was established at Fort Pierre in 1817. White settlement of the territory in the 1800s led to clashes with the Sioux, as some of the land had been granted to the tribe by an earlier treaty.

In 1861, President James Buchanan signed the Organic Act creating the Dakota Territory. Twenty-eight years later, in 1889, the Omnibus Bill or Enabling Act was adopted by Congress which provided for dividing the Dakota Territory into the states of North Dakota and South Dakota and also enabled the two Dakotas, Montana and Washington to formulate constitutions.

The first constitutional convention seeking South Dakota statehood was held in 1883. This was the first time the people of Dakota Territory petitioned Congress for admission to the Union. A second convention was held two years later. In 1889, the third convention led to the final constitutional provisions. The South Dakota Constitution was adopted in 1889 and on November 2 of that year President Benjamin Harrison signed the document that made South Dakota the thirty-ninth or fortieth state. North Dakota was admitted to the Union on the same day. The President intentionally shuffled the two proclamations and as a result it is not known which he signed first.

Today, two significant parts of South Dakota’s economy are fueled by tourism and agriculture. Visitors flock to the state to see Mt. Rushmore, which features 60-feet-tall sculptures of the faces of Presidents Washington, Jefferson, T. Roosevelt and Lincoln.

South Dakota’s agriculture industry has a $25.6 billion impact on the state’s economy each year. With more than 19 million acres of cropland and 23 million acres of pastureland, the state’s farmers and ranchers are among our economy’s key drivers. South Dakota ranks in the top 10 in the production of 25 agricultural commodities.

Famous South Dakotans include newscaster Tom Brokaw, Senator and Vice President Hubert Humphrey, and NFL kicker Adam Vinatieri.
State Symbols:

State Flag:
The South Dakota flag features the state seal surrounded by a golden blazing sun in a field of sky blue. Letters reading: "South Dakota, The Mount Rushmore State", the official state nickname, are arranged in a circle around the sun.

State Seal
The symbols on the great seal of South Dakota represent the state’s commerce, industry, and natural resources.
